Further, to-day the Missouri Pacific situation, which was another cause of the foray against the stock market yesterday, also considerably straightened itself out. While matters here are still in an involved state the case as it stands at present seems to be that a banking interest which acquired a great deal of Missouri Pacific stock at a low price in the period of market weakness last July has retired from any participation in the management of the property, that its place has been taken by another banking interest and that the party of Standard Oil Missouri Pacific stockholders remains on friendly terms with the Gould family interest, which still retains a controlling voice in Missouri Pacific affairs. Probably a great deal of bitter feeling has been caused in these struggles and rivalries, and Wall Street is quite sceptical as to the degree of permanent improvement that the Missouri Pacific Railway Company will enjoy as the net result of all that has happened. Nevertheless the change of relations that has taken place seems to afford no fair basis for expectation of immediate further decline in Missouri Pacific stock in view of the existing low price at which the stock is quoted. Outside of the capitalists who have been fighting for control only speculators of reckless sort have lately engaged themselves in commitments in Missouri Pacific shares. Conditions of the same general nature are likely to prevail for some time to come. Although dealings in the stock market were much less than yesterday business seemed relatively active on account of the long previous period of dulness. In the main, because of the general causes mentioned, the tendency of the market was upward, but the rallying movement did not become pronounced until the last hour. and before that time prices hesitated in a way that strongly suggested a distinct lack of market resilience. They also sug-gested, however, that a good deal of selling of stocks yesterday had been for the account of professional operators for the decline, even if the pressure brought to bear by these individuals managed to force a good deal of actual liquidation. The statement was generally made in commission houses that such legislation had occurred and that a fairly large number of people who had been carrying stocks for months past, tired of paying interest thereon as well as discouraged over the recurring weakness of the market, had lightened their speculative burdens. It is conceded that acute market interest now converges upon the state of affairs in the iron and steel trade. With the volume of unfilled steel orders diminishing for lower steel prices has begun. There s much talk of a possible reduction in Lake Superior ore prices for 1911. The Iron Age in its weekly summary of the iron market intimates that sentiment in favor of a reduction from the level of 1910 has become more pronounced, but that steel interests are opposing this lest the reduction unfavorably affect the market for finished products.
